Note:

- 1. The revised version of the "Protection of Children and Youths Welfare and Rights Act" promulgated on Feb. 4, 2015 added provisions obligating preschool educators, immigration processing personnel and household registration personnel to report related cases.
 - 2. Article 53 of the "Protection of Children and Youths Welfare and Rights Act" stipulates, personnel obligated to report on cases of children and youth protection are also obligated to report on child abuse and children or youth using drugs. The same incident may be reported by several types of people.
- 3. In view of the wide-ranging grounds for reporting cases of children or youth protection in the "Protection of Children and Youths Welfare and Rights Act" and some overlaps of regulations, to help social workers focus on domestic abuse incidents, the Ministry of Health and Welfare has adopted a system to triage children and youth protection cases into several categories, including domestic abuse, external incidents, school bullying, sex harassment, and drug abuse. The categorized statistics have been available since 2014.

Jote:

Reasons that some figures of Attachment 8-18 are different from those of Attachment 8-16:

- 1. Time gap between statistics compiled by police authorities on dates of uncovering the cases and statistics compiled by prosecutors' offices on dates when cases were transferred for investigation by prosecutors.
- when children and youth are involved in the cases, since minors under the age of 14 will not face penalty and those aged 14 or over but under 18 2. Difference between cases uncovered and cases transferred. The police shall forward uncovered cases to juvenile courts, not prosecutors' offices, will only be transferred to prosecutors' offices when judges find that the criminal conduct is subject to criminal disposal.
- administration may have a different classification system. If several categories of criminal conduct are listed in the document of transfer, only one 3. Prosecutorial statistics of the Ministry of Justice are based on the category of criminal conduct listed on documents of transfer, but the police will be entered into the statistical count.
